Abstract	The Tom and Melissa Campbell Collection consists of published and technical reports, survey worksheets, drill logs, thin sections, maps, and electronic records. The materials were gathered while the Campbells worked on the creation of the Homestake Data Archive and the Homestake Core Archive.

Historical Note

Tom and Melissa Campbell worked part-time for three years on the creation of the Homestake Data Archives and the Homestake Core Archives after the 2000 closure of the Homestake Mining Operations in Lead, South Dakota. The data was to be used by the Sanford Underground Lab.

The initial work on the Data Archives consisted of gathering all Homestake exploration data, which had been kept at several different properties in both Central City and Lead. The Campbells then organized the data geographically according to mining district. After the geographical organization, inventories were made in Microsoft Excel.

The Core Archives began with the analysis of maps and cross-sections from Homestake exploration drilling projects, which led to the decision of what cores to retain and which to throw away. Retained cores were transported to core sheds. The core sheds were then mapped by Melissa Campbell to make locating a specific core relatively easy. Melissa Campbell carried out this work as part of an independent study that was not funded by the State of South Dakota or Homestake.

The Campbells were unable to complete either project due to the termination of funding in 2004.
